Preface

As part of the comprehensive labor market information program, this report represents an effort to update commuting patterns of workers in New Hampshire. Previously, the latest data available was from the 1970 U.S. Census of New Hampshire. This report summarizes by location where workers worked based on the reporting by 388,021 workers in the 1980 U.S. Census of New Hampshire.

Basically the place of residence, place of work, specific locations where workers commute to in significant numbers, specific locations where workers commute from in significant numbers, and also out of state locations to and from are listed in the tables showing data for each city and town in New Hampshire. Readers should take into consideration that the numbers reported are understated as there were 36,349 workers who did not report their place of work.

Significant changes have occurred in the decade between 1970 and 1980. New roads and highways, new and expanding industries (especially in the high technology and the nuclear energy fields) have made many new job opportunities available and the marked improvement in miles per gallon of American and foreign cars by the automobile industry have all been factors in the ever changing commuting patterns of workers residing in New Hampshire. Many of the new workers have migrated from other states and in the past commuting was part of their lifestyle.

After the results of every U.S. Census are available, a special committee reviews the metropolitan statistical data for possible changes and some revisions of previous definitions occur based on updated commuting patterns. The data on pages 73 through 85 represent revised definitions, effective June 1983 for each of the Manchester, Nashua and N.H. Portion of the Lawrence - Haverhill MA areas. In addition, a new Metropolitan Statistical Area - Portsmouth - Dover - Rochester N.H. - M.E. was designated by the committee and data for this area is also listed beginning on page 82. All revised definitions are used in various federal and state programs. New Hampshire will begin using these new definitions in making monthly employment and unemployment estimates in January 1985 and revised data for 1983 and 1984 will also be available for trend purposes.

"Commuting Patterns - New Hampshire
1980 Census Data"

The 1980 census revealed that 388,021 persons reported where they worked. Of that number, 181,299 or forty seven percent worked in the town in which they lived. That percentage varied greatly by town, from a low of zero percent to a high of one hundred percent. By labor market area, however, the range ran from a low of twenty six percent in the Salem LMA to a high of sixty-five percent in the Berlin LMA. Salem's low percentage is due to the fact that fifty three percent of those reporting, actually worked in Massachusetts. Berlin's high percentage was due to an eighty six percent rate in Berlin and Conway, the two largest communities in the Berlin LMA.

Of the 206,722 who commute, all but about 50,000 commute to another town in NH. Out of 50,123 who commute out of state, seventy three percent work in Massachusetts, eleven percent each commute to Maine and Vermont, with the remaining five percent working in some state other than Maine, Vermont or Massachusetts.

As you might expect, the majority of those workers commuting to Maine were from the Dover and Portsmouth LMA's, the majority commuting to Massachusetts were from the Nashua and Salem LMA's and the majority commuting to Vermont were from the Claremont and Keene LMA's.

The number of people who commute into a town compared to the number both working and residing in that town came out to a 50-50 mix on the average for the State as a whole. By labor market area, the percentage of commuters to "in town" workers ranged from a low of thirty seven percent in Berlin to a high of sixty six percent in Portsmouth. The low percentage of commuters within the Berlin LMA was explained in the first paragraph. The Portsmouth LMA had several towns with a large percentage of workers commuting into their jobs, in particular, Newington with eighty-eight percent and Seabrook with eighty one percent.

Fifty five percent of the 9,108 commuters from Maine were working in the Portsmouth LMA with three-fourths of those working in the city of Portsmouth. Eighty one percent of the 11,185 coming in from Massachusetts were working in the Nashua, Portsmouth or Salem labor market areas. Seventy three percent of the 5,827 commuting into New Hampshire from Vermont were working in the Claremont LMA and about one half of those were working in Hanover.

Commuting Patterns Trivia

In looking at the census data, certain oddities were noted, and for what they are worth are mentioned here. In looking at these, one must keep in mind two things. First, the data is now four and one half years old and could have undergone some variation since it was obtained. Secondly, it was not possible to obtain information on all workers. For instance, in the Manchester MSA, only ninety two percent of the workers reported their place of work, in the Nashua MSA eighty nine percent and in the Portsmouth-Dover-Rochester MSA ninety one percent reported.

- In Ellsworth, no one who lives there works there.
- In Danville, all who live there and work, work right in the town.
- No one commutes in to Dummer, Dorchester, Eaton or Lyman. All employment in these towns are held by residents.
- Atkinson (69%), Hinsdale (51%), Newton (61%), Pelham (60%), Plaistow (53%), and Salem (55%) as indicated in parenthesis, have over 50 percent of its resident workers working outside of New Hampshire.
- All six jobs in Hart's location are held by outsiders.
- No one appears to live in Cambridge, but sixty-three people commute to work there.

Commuting Patterns - Berlin Labor Market Area

Some 15,187 residents of the Berlin Labor Market Area reported employment in the Census. Of that number, 9,814, or sixty five percent actually resided in the town in which they worked. Only two percent of Stark's 165 working residents work in Stark while 100 percent of Dixville's 18 resident workers work right in Dixville. According to the census, no workers were reported as residing in either Hart's location or in Cambridge. The largest number of workers commuting out from a community are the 649 in Gorham.

Some 61 workers commute to Maine from Conway while another 73 work in Massachusetts. The largest number working in Vermont are the 138 workers from Stewartstown. There were 78 other workers who commuted to Vermont from Colebrook. The town with the largest number of workers commuting in was Conway with 1,806. Another 1,050 travel to Berlin each day.

Some 15,517 people actually work in the Berlin LMA with almost 60 percent working in either Berlin or Conway. About 621 of the people working in Conway come in from Maine. Very few workers from Massachusetts work in the Berlin LMA and those who do appear to work only in Conway, Gorham, or Cambridge. Some 69 percent of the 311 workers coming in from Vermont go to work in Colebrook, Stewartstown, or Stratford. About 62 of the 73 workers, coming in from states other than the above mentioned three, are working in either Madison or Berlin.

Commuting Patterns - Claremont Labor Market Area

A total of 29,219 residents of the Claremont Labor Market Area reported where they were working in the 1980 census. Some 15,068 or 52 percent indicated they worked in the town where they lived. Only 8 percent of Springfield's 179 working residents were reported as working in Springfield while 76 percent of Claremont's 5,885 working residents reported they were working in Claremont itself. The community with the largest number of people commuting out was Lebanon with 2,747. Canaan had 4 commute to Maine to work. Some 60 residents of Lebanon and 31 residents of New London work in Massachusetts. No other community has more than 16 of its residents working in Massachusetts. Almost one in five commuters cross the border into Vermont with the majority coming from Lebanon (569), Charlestown (558), and Claremont (532). As for workers going into other states, some 158 out of 372 come from Lebanon with 148 of those going to work in Hunterdon County, New Jersey.

Some 29,790 people were reported as working in the Claremont Labor Market Area and 14,722 of them or 49 percent commute to their job. Although 85 percent of the working residents of Hanover, work in Hanover itself, nevertheless, the large number of jobs available, primarily due to Dartmouth College and the Mary Hitchcook Hospital has caused Hanover to have the largest number of people commuting in of any community in the Claremont LMA. The number of commuters is 5,538 with Lebanon a distant second with 2,728. The only other communities with over 1,000 commuters arriving in every day are Claremont with 1,910 and Newport with 1,523.

Hanover also leads in total employment with 8,576 working in the town, with Claremont (6,394), Lebanon (5,370), Newport (3,060), and New London (1,551) following. No other Claremont LMA town had employment exceeding 1,000 in 1980.

Only 10 workers commute in from Maine and all work in Lebanon. Massachusetts has 145 commuting up to the LMA and 95 percent of them work in either Lebanon or Hanover. Vermont, however, contributes 29 percent of the total labor market area commuters. Some 52 percent of those work in Hanover and 75 percent of the total commuters from Vermont work in either Hanover or Lebanon. An interesting statistic here is that over three-fourths of the people working in Langdon, NH commute from Vermont. A total of 86 people from other states work in the Claremont LMA with one half of them working in Hanover.

Commuting Patterns - Concord Labor Market Area

A total of 36,355 persons, living in the Concord Labor Market Area, reported where they were employed in the 1980 census. Some 17,375 or 48 percent indicated they were working in the same community where they lived. This percentage varied from 11 percent in both Allenstown and Webster to 73 percent in Hillsborough and 83 percent in Concord.

Allenstown, Boscawen, Bow, Concord, and Pembroke all had over 1,000 residents commuting out topped by Concord's 2,330 workers. A relatively insignificant number commuted to Maine (91) and Vermont (22) while well over 500 persons commuted to Massachusetts. Almost one-third of those lived in Concord or Pembroke with approximately 50 each commuting from Allenstown, Deerfield and Henniker. Another 186 work in another state outside of the three mentioned above with 17 of the 25 communities having at least two such commuters.

The total number of people who reported they were working in the Concord Labor Market Area (36,487) was almost exactly the same figure as was reported to be workers who lived in the Concord Labor Market Area. There were 19,112 persons who reported they commuted to work in the labor market area, and 69 percent commuted to Concord a realistic figure considering state government is headquartered there. Just over 450 workers commute into the Concord LMA from other states, almost one half of them from Massachusetts. Some sixty four percent of those commuting in from other states are working in Concord.

The community receiving the second largest number of commuters is Bow with 945, some 75 percent of their reported work force. Almost 850 commute into Hillsborough, the primary community in the Hillsborough Job Center. At the other end, only 10 workers or 16 percent of their work force commute into Webster.

Workers commute to Concord from every town in the Concord LMA except Windsor which sends all 17 of its commuters to Henniker. Almost 85 percent of Boscawen commuters or almost 1,000 workers, commute into Concord as do 83 percent or almost 1,300 of Bow's 1,545 commuters and 62 percent or 1,162 of Pembroke's commuters.

Commuting Patterns - Dover Labor Market Area

Approximately 40,000 people in the Dover Labor Market Area responded to the 1980 Census by indicating they were employed. However, only 40 percent of them or 16,000 indicated they were working in the community in which they resided. No other labor market area had a lower percentage of non commuters. Only two communities had over half of its working residents working in that same community - Durham with 64 percent and Rochester with 51 percent. Three towns - Madbury (7 percent), Nottingham (8 percent), and Rollinsford (9 percent) had fewer than 10 percent of its working residents working in the same town. Every single community had more than 100 commuting out with 7 of the 18 communities having over 1,000 commuting out. As one might expect from its geographic location, some 3,000 people commute to Maine. Only Brookfield had no one commuting to Maine. Close to 800 commute to Massachusetts. Barrington, Dover, Durham, and Nottingham have over 100 people each commute to Massachusetts. Rollinsford was the only town to report no one working in Massachusetts. No town reported anyone working in Vermont. Some 242 were reported to be working in other states. The 50 reported from Rochester were all working in Florida and were obviously not commuting - at least not in the traditional sense.

Of the jobs within each community, some 48 percent of them are filled by local residents with commuters accounting for 52 percent. About 75 percent of the jobs in their community are filled by residents of Brookfield and Wakefield. However, only 9 percent of such jobs are filled by residents of Newfields. Four communities have 2,800 or more commuting in led by Dover with 5,236. Durham, surprisingly, is second with 3,055 followed by Somersworth and Rochester. None of the other 14 communities have more than 800 incoming commuters. Brookfield has only 8 such workers reported. Almost as many workers commute in from Maine (2,967) to the Dover LMA as commute out from the LMA to Maine (3,023). About 2,500 of those arriving from Maine are working in Dover, Portsmouth, or Somersworth. Durham apparently utilizes 46 percent of the workers from Massachusetts coming into the Dover Labor Market Area. Only 11 workers commute from Vermont and all 11 work in Dover. Workers from other states totaled of 16, with 11 of them, all from Orange, Connecticut, working in Durham.

Commuting Patterns - Keene Labor Market Area

Almost 30,000 people in the Keene Labor Market Area reported they were working during the 1980 census. Of that number some 15,000 or 50 percent worked right in the town where they resided. Keene, the primary city, led the way as expected with 84 percent of its working residents remaining right in Keene. However, only three other communities, Jaffrey (54 percent), Walpole (50 percent), and Peterborough (69 percent) met or exceeded the 50 percent figure for the labor market area as a whole. Sharon, meanwhile only had 5 percent of its working residents working right in Sharon while Stoddard (7 percent), Richmond and Sullivan (8 percent), and Surry (9 percent) all saw fewer than 10 percent of its employed residents working in their home community.

Swanzey with 2,010 commuting residents, led all communities in the Keene LMA in terms of numbers commuting out, followed by Keene (1,502), Hinsdale (1,011), Chesterfield (964), and Rindge (961). Sharon, despite its high percentage of commuters, had only 72 in total number and was followed by Roxbury with only 86.

Commuters to Maine are almost non-existent and most of those few are from Keene. Over 800 commute to Massachusetts though, and 55 percent of those are from Fitzwilliam, Rindge, and Peterborough. The first two towns are located right on the Massachusetts border and Peterborough residents can take Route 202 right into Massachusetts. Vermont has over 1,700 such commuters from the labor market area. Some 40 percent of them are from Hinsdale and of that number, about 90 percent are working in Brattleboro. Walpole and Chesterfield, situated along the Vermont border, have 650-700 residents between them commuting to Vermont. Some 220 work in other states with 79 of those reported to be from Keene.

Over 13,300 commute into the various towns in the labor market area with Keene receiving the largest number, over 5,700. Peterborough receives over 2,500 such commuters. Some 64 percent of the people working in both Greenfield and Peterborough are commuters as are 61 percent of the Marlborough workers.

Over 1,000 commuters came into the labor market area from Massachusetts and Vermont. Almost 30 percent of them work in Keene. Some 185 of the Vermonters work in Walpole. Large groups of Massachusetts residents, besides working in Keene, are also commuting to Rindge and Peterborough.

Commuting Patterns - Laconia Labor Market Area

During the 1980 Census 33,135 persons from the Laconia Labor Market Area reported they were employed. About 46 percent or 15,373 were employed in the town where they resided with the remaining 54 percent commuting to work else where. Wolfeboro with 81 percent of the residents working in town and Laconia with 78 percent of such workers had the highest percentage of non commuters in the LMA. On the other hand, only 6 percent of Groton's working residents worked right in Groton and none of Ellsworth's residents worked in the town.

Five communities had 1,000 or more residents commuting to jobs. The five were Belmont (1,380), Franklin (1,769), Gilford (1,561), Laconia (1,395), and Tilton (1,007). All other communities had fewer than 900 commuting. Slightly over 100 workers commute to Maine with the numbers spread over 9 different communities. Almost 700 commute to Massachusetts with the workers coming from 30 different communities. Only Gilford (109) has over 80 such commuters. Between 50-60 residents spread over 7 communities, commute to Vermont. Another 185 work in other states with over half of that number coming from Gilford, Meredith, and Plymouth.

Approximately 14,479 workers commute into the various communities in the Laconia Labor Market Area. Those receiving the largest number of commuters are Laconia (4,640), Plymouth (1,480), Franklin (966), Meredith (902), Bristol (880), and Tilton (805). Some 76 percent of the workers in Center Harbor are commuters, as are 84 percent of the ones in Groton. Large percentages of commuters are also found in Belmont, Tilton, Freedom, Ashland, Bridgewater, and Bristol. About one half of the commuters from Maine went to work in Ossipee with the others scattered throughout 8 other communities. About 62 percent of the Massachusetts commuters work in Laconia, again with the balance scattered throughout 8 communities. Only 66 were reported as having commuted in from Vermont with 78 more coming from other states.

Commuting Patterns - Littleton Labor Market Area

Just over 11,000 residents of the Littleton Labor Market Area reported in the 1980 Census that they were employed. Of that number, about 6,100 or 55 percent were employed in the community where they resided. This meant that some 4,900 were commuting to work outside of their place of residence.

Towns with the largest number of residents commuting out were Littleton with 608, Bethlehem with 513, and Lancaster with 402. Only 6 commute out from Waterville Valley as 94 percent of their reported working residents work right in Waterville Valley. Other communities with high percentage of residents working with their own community are Lincoln with 80 percent, Littleton and Haverhill with 74 percent each, and Lancaster with 69 percent.

Eight workers from Thornton were commuting to Maine. There were 72 other from the LMA commuting to Massachusetts, 29 of them from Lancaster. The majority of commuters out of state journey to Vermont. Some 566 reported they commuted to Vermont. The single largest number from the labor market area came, surprisingly enough, from Haverhill with 120 commuters. Another 118 reported they work in some other states with 40, or one third of the total, reporting they live in Littleton.

The 23 communities in the Littleton LMA reported a total of 10,506 persons working in their communities. About 4,400 or 42 percent commute to their place of work. Littleton had the largest number of employees with 2,744 followed by Haverhill with 1,545 and Lancaster with 1,329. All other communities had fewer than 1,000 workers.

Littleton received the most commuters, 1,009, followed by Haverhill with 590. No one commuted into Lyman as all jobs were reportedly held by residents. Four people commuted into Benton, 8 into Jefferson, 10 into Easton and 12 into Landoff. Very few workers commuted into New Hampshire from 48 of the states. The 49th state, Vermont, had 556 with 173 commuting to Haverhill, 131 to Littleton and 84 to Lancaster.

Commuting Patterns - Manchester Labor Market Area

Some 74,000 residents of the Manchester Labor Market Area reported that they were employed on the 1980 Census. 38,900 or 53 percent stated they were working in the town where they resided while over 35,100 indicated they commuted to another community. Some 78 percent of the city of Manchester's working population work right in Manchester. None of the other 11 communities in the LMA had over 30 percent of its working residents working right in town. Because of its sizable population, Manchester also had the largest number of commuters, over 9,000. Other communities with a large number of commuters were Derry (5,887), Londonderry (4,822), and Goffstown (4,018). New Boston (589), Chester (716), and Weare (900) had the smallest number of commuters. The number of persons commuting to Maine was 109 and 63 of them were from Manchester. Even fewer (80) commuted to Vermont and one half of those were from Manchester.

However, a sizable number commute to Massachusetts. The 1980 Census reported 5,890 made that commute. About 82 percent of that number live in Derry (2,319), Londonderry (1,416), or Manchester (1,097). Commuters from all 12 communities make the daily trek from New Hampshire into Massachusetts. A fairly large number (355) worked in "other" states with the largest number coming from Londonderry followed by Derry and Manchester in that order.

The Census reported that 66,837 people work in the various communities in the Manchester Labor Market Area. Of that number some 27,940 or 42 percent commute. Manchester with 17,508 receives the most commuters. Chester with only 39 receives the fewest. Hooksett has the largest percentage of commuters to total jobs in their community with 73 percent. Close behind are Bedford with 72 percent and Londonderry with 71 percent. On the other hand, only 23 percent of the jobs in Chester are filled by commuters.

The number of commuters from Maine, Vermont, and "other" states are quite small. However, over 800 people commute in from Massachusetts with well over one half working in Manchester.

Commuting Patterns - Nashua Labor Market Area

According to the 1980 Census, over 61,600 people residing in the Nashua Labor Market Area were working. Of that number, 33,854 or 55 percent, commuted to work. Nashua itself led the exodus with over 9,800 followed by Merrimack with 4,516 and Hudson with 4,345. A small number of people commuted to Maine (71) and Vermont (22). However, over 11,000 commuted to Massachusetts, a figure equal to the total number of workers found in the Littleton Labor Market Area. Almost one half of those commuters were from Nashua (5,163) with large contingents coming from Pelham (1,994), Hudson (1,295), and Merrimack (827). Another 406 work in other states with 138 of them coming from Nashua.

The total number of people who reported they actually worked in the Nashua LMA was 56,409. Just over one half, or 51 percent, of them commuted to their job. Over one half of the commuters worked in Nashua (15,103). A large number of commuters worked in Milford (2,656), Hudson (3,206), and Merrimack (4,937). Only 6 commuters worked in Mason, with 16 and 18 commuters working in Lyndeborough and Mont Vernon respectively. A negligible number commuted from Maine (20) and Vermont (12). However, some 4,145 commuted in from Massachusetts with the lion's share (65 percent) working in Nashua. As might be expected, several hundred people also commute into Pelham, Hudson, and Merrimack from Massachusetts. Another 197 commute in from other states and all work in Milford, Merrimack, Hudson or Nashua.

Commuting Patterns - Portsmouth Labor Market Area

Just over 34,900 persons living in the Portsmouth Labor Market Area, reported during the 1980 Census that they were employed. Approximately 14,000 or 40 percent indicated they lived and worked in the same community. This means that 60 percent or almost 21,000 were commuters. The towns with the largest percentage of resident commuters were East Kingston 92 percent, Danville 91 percent, South Hampton 90 percent, and Sandown 89 percent. Conversely 61 percent of the working residents of the city of Portsmouth work right in the city itself. The largest number of commuters are the 4,450 from Portsmouth, followed by 2,900 from Hampton and 2,332 from Exeter. None of the 19 communities have fewer than 240 commuters. Eleven commuters from North Hampton are the only people who work in Vermont from the Portsmouth LMA.

As might be expected from the geographical location as well as the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard located in Kittery Maine, 1,938 workers commuted to Maine including 929 from Portsmouth. Exeter, Greenland, Hampton, and North Hampton had over 100 such residents. South Hampton and Sandown were the only communities with no Maine commuters.

The Census revealed that 4,362 residents commuted to Massachusetts. Leading this exodus were 831 from Seabrook, 732 from Hampton, 404 from Exeter, and 394 from Sandown. Another 188 worked in other states with 50 percent of those being residents of the city of Portsmouth.

About 41,800 people were reported as working in the Portsmouth Labor Market Area with 18,052 in Portsmouth, 6,502 in Seabrook, and 5,696 in Exeter. Some 66 percent of these workers were commuters. Over 11,000 commuted into the Portsmouth LMA with 5,281 going to Seabrook, 3,789 to Newington, 3,355 to Exeter, and 1,433 to Hampton. Over 5,000 workers come in from Maine every day and 75 percent of them go to Portsmouth. Another 642 go to Newington and 358 others go to work in Seabrook. Some 2,774 were reported as coming in from Massachusetts and 1,800 of them, or 65 percent of the total, work in Seabrook. In addition, 310 work in Portsmouth, 259 in Hampton and 180 in Exeter. Finally, 188 people who work in the Portsmouth LMA come from other states.

About 98 percent of the workers in Newington are commuters as are 81 percent of the workers in Seabrook. Only 11 percent of the workers in Sandown are commuters.

Commuting Patterns - Salem Labor Market Area

Although there are only 8 communities making up the Salem Labor Market Area, some 22,669 were reported in the 1980 Census to be employed. However, only 5,807 or 26 percent, were working in the community in which they resided. This percentage of non commuters was the lowest in the state. In other words, a higher percentage of people in the Salem LMA commute than does any other labor market area. In Atkinson, 93 percent of its working population commute and in Newton 92 percent do. Even in Salem, with its large population base, 68 percent of its resident workers commute to work. Six of the communities have between 1,200 - 2,000 workers commuting and Salem has over 7,700 of its workers traveling to their jobs.

The number of people traveling to work in Maine and Vermont is practically negligible. However, 11,978, or 71 percent of the reported commuters, commute into Massachusetts. Over 580 people from each community make the daily trek into Massachusetts with 6,345 commuting from Salem alone. Very few residents of the Salem LMA work in states other than Massachusetts.

A reported total of 12,215 people indicated they were actually working in the Salem LMA in 1980. Of that number 6,408 or 52 percent commuted in to their job. Some 3,464 commuted in to Salem while another 1,753 commuted in to Plaistow. Except for Massachusetts, few people commuted in from other states. Over 2,000 commuted in from the Bay State and 58 percent of them worked in Salem. Most of the rest commute from Massachusetts to Plaistow.
